Peace Week 2010

—The Largest Virtual Peace Summit Ever

The International Day of Peace is September 21st each year. This year, Peace Week, the largest virtual peace summit ever, takes place from September 14th through the 21st.

We invite you to participate online. This event will offer you insights to create peace in your life, your family, your community and our world.

It promises to be a journey of personal growth and collective change as well as an opportunity to get together with people from around the world who deeply care about the future of our planet and the potential for humanity to make a profound shift beyond violence.

The Dalai Lama Foundation invites you to participate in any or all of the dozens of tele-seminars during PeaceWeek, with leaders such as 13 Indigenous Grandmothers, Nobel Laureate Betty Williams, Michael Bernard Beckwith, Dr. A. T. Ariyaratne, Rep. Dennis Kucinich and Ambassador John McDonald. You'll hear about groundbreaking work from Israel to Sri Lanka to Watts, as well as emerging innovations such as the National Peace Academy and the Youth Promise Act.

You'll have access to the entire PeaceWeek library for years to come, and to share with friends.

Participate in as many live calls as you like, and interact with leaders and other participants via a state-of-the-art conference platform that connects you to people around the world. You can also listen to recordings of the calls at any later time.

The Missing Peace – At the Nobel

Entering its last year of travel, The Missing Peace: Artists Consider the Dalai Lama will be showing at the Nobel Museum in Stockholm from October 9th, 2010 through January 9th, 2011. For those of you able to visit this venue, this will be your last opportunity to see the exhibition outside the US. The Missing Peace wraps up in San Antonio, Texas [USA] in 2011.
